

Bachelor of Science in Child Development

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

The Bachelor of Science (B.S.) degree in Child Development prepares individuals for professions with the goal to help children reach their fullest potential. With foundations in human development and child and family relationships, the Child Development degree program provides individuals ready to support the developmental needs of children (prenatal through adolescence) along with roles in human service organizations. The Child Development degree program offers a holistic approach to child studies, focusing on the typical and atypical developmental needs of children-physically, emotionally, socially, cognitively and culturally.

Are you ready to help positively influence the future for children and families?

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

- Serve in a variety of settings (i.e schools, social service and community resource organizations, early learning & care locations, home visiting programs, hospitals, therapeutic camps, children's museums)
- Complete field work and internship experiences with mentors by current early childhood and human services professionals
- Qualify for Kappa Omicron Nu, National Honor Society for the Human Services and ONU's chapter, Kappa Omicron Nu
